The two adjectives (in which the comparative affix ‘-er’ can attach to) are (b) fancy and (d) narrow. The phonological conditions are as follows: For the attested disyllabic adjectives, the base adjectives end in a vowel. For the unattested disyllabic adjectives, the base adjectives end in a consonant.

The word for the blank ① is ‘ordinary’, and the word for the blank ② is ‘raised’. First, for the raised subject in (4b), the meaningless dummy pronoun ‘it’ can appear in the raised subject position as in ‘It happened to rain’. Thus the appearance of ‘it’ suggests that the subject of ‘happened’ is a raised subject. Second, for the ordinary subject in (4a), (4a) does not share the same truth condition with its passive counterpart as in ‘The man attempted to be saved by the fire fighter’. (The subject of ‘attempted’ refers to ‘The fire fighter’ in (4a) but ‘The man’ in the passive form), indicating that the subject of ‘attempted’ is an ordinary subject.

In the conversation, S2 demonstrates ‘Semantic deviation’ and a deviation in the ‘Number of arguments’. First, S2 produces the ill-formed utterance, ‘What’s the pen?’ instead of the intended meaning, “Do you have a pen?”. Additionally, S2 says “She is giving Mary,” where the necessary argument, ‘a book’ is omitted.

The word is “sloth”. Second, (Jimmy’s situation is similar to that of the woman in that) both express intense emotion and fervor but find themselves ignored and unheard. The woman’s agony goes unnoticed among the overwhelming crowd, just as Jimmy’s passionate outbursts and desire for human enthusiasm are met with indifference by Alison and Cliff, leaving him frustrated and alienated.

Version 1

First, (a) is ungrammatical because it violates the following theta-criterion: (ii) each theta-role must be assigned to only one argument. The ditransitive predicate (verb) 'put' requires three arguments, but (a) lacks one argument which has a goal (or location) theta-role. Second, (b) is ungrammatical because it violates the following theta-criterion: (i) each argument must receive only one theta-role. The transitive verb 'hit' can assign two theta roles to 'John' and the silent relative pronoun (\emptyset_{wh}); the argument 'it' doesn't get a theta role.

Version 2

First, (a) is ungrammatical because it violates the second condition: each theta-role must be assigned to only one argument. The ditransitive predicate 'put' requires three arguments, but (a) lacks one argument (which has a goal (or location) theta-role); (there is not a one-to-one matching of the theta roles to the arguments in this sentence). Second, (b) is ungrammatical because it violates the first condition: each argument must receive only one theta-role. The transitive verb 'hit' can assign two theta roles to 'John' and the silent relative pronoun. When the silent relative pronoun receives one theta role from 'hit', the argument 'it' cannot receive a theta role.

Week 1 and Week 6 do not align with the PBL procedure. In Week 1, Ms. Park directly sets and announces the project goal to the students, instead of allowing them to collaboratively determine the goal and scope of the project. In Week 6, she evaluates students' learning progress based solely on the final products – brochures – without assessing both the learning process and the product.

The supervising teacher provides two suggestions: intensive listening and creative activities. The student teacher incorporates these suggestions into the modified lesson plan. First, during the listening activity, the original story-retelling task is replaced with a gap-filling activity. Additionally, after listening, the student teacher plans for students to act out assigned scenes instead of merely presenting their summaries.

The word is “scarcity”. Second, it means that humans, like cacti in rainforests, are poorly adapted to abundance. Just as cacti struggle with too much water in a rainforest, humans struggle to regulate desires in a world overflowing with resources.

또는, Second, it means that human beings, like cacti in a rainforest, are poorly adapted to their current environment of abundance. Just as cacti struggle with too much water in a rainforest due to their evolution for arid conditions, humans, whose brains are designed for a world of scarcity, face challenges in regulating their behavior and desires in a world overflowing with resources, leading to issues like overconsumption and addiction.

Putting oneself first can offer several advantages, not only for individuals but also for those around them. First, setting boundaries, such as declining unwanted requests, can reduce stress and improve relationships. Second, prioritizing personal well-being increases happiness, which can positively impact those around us, such as children benefiting from a relaxed parent. In conclusion, it is important to have the confidence to decline requests that feel overly demanding.

Ms. Kim does not conform to guiding principles ① and ④. First, she explicitly teaches grammar points through drills instead of encouraging students to independently explore and discover language rules. Additionally, she conducts a team-based quiz and provides comments to groups rather than assessing individual performance and offering personalized feedback.
